

What makes a house a home?

what makes a house a home?

Recap - What types of houses did we discuss last time?

Terraced houses are lots of houses all joined together in a row. They are usually quite narrow.

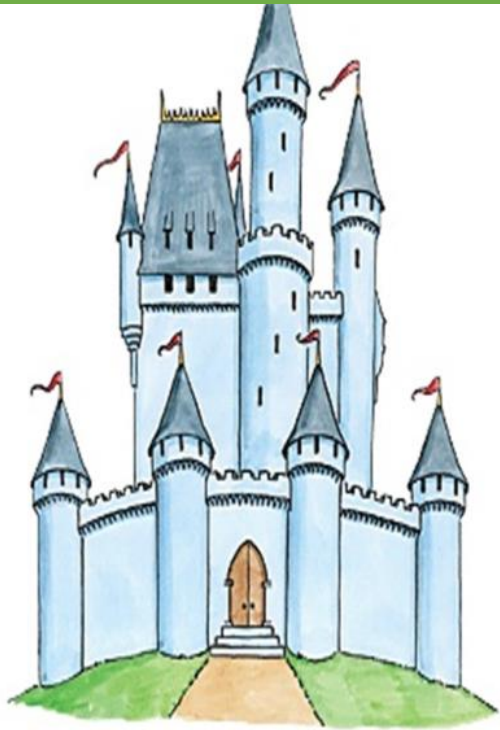

Semi-detached

A semi – detached house is a house that is attached to only one other house.

Lets explore other types of houses

This is a castle.
Which story do you know which has a castle?

This is a cottage.
Do you know a story with a cottage like this in it?

What type of house is this?

Describe what it looks like

A large, empty rectangular box with a black border, intended for a user to write a description of the house shown in the image.

Recap

In what time period were round houses built?

Recap

Explain why Bronze age people might have used these materials to build their homes.

Round houses were first built in the past, around the time of the Bronze age.

Watch me Round houses

They were built into mounds of rubbish known as midden. This could include small stones, shells, mud and animal bones.

It would provide some stability as well as insulation.

These houses were usually round.

They had beds and storage shelves, and a hearth in the middle.

None of these houses remain, but we can see the foundations. Some houses used wattle and daub (a mixture of clay, mud and hay stuck to sticks that have been woven in and out of the timber frame) for the walls and had thatched roofs.

Task in books

What did the first houses look like?

Write down 3 features of this round house.

Challenge:-

Explain what you like about it.

I like the ...

In the past...

A long time ago...

Useful words

a long time ago

old wattle

grass

past clay

logs

daub

sticks

wood mud

present